Celebrating 125 Years in Racine

Pictured here is the second-ever location of the Racine Public Library, used until 1958. The library's second building was made by Andrew Carnegie in 1904 and still stands today at 7th and Main. This space is now the site of the Racine Heritage Museum.

This was one of two buildings that Carnegie built for the Racine Public Library. The second was constructed in 1914 at 1407 Memorial Drive.

Now Open: Our Brand New Seed Library

What is a seed library?

A seed library is a collection of seed packages that anyone can take from the library to grow at home.

Where is the seed library?

You can find the seed library on the Racine Public Library's second floor, near the DVDs. Look for the tall cabinet covered in moss and flowers.

How many seeds am I allowed to take home?

As many as you can use!

Can I donate seeds?

We are not currently accepting seed donations from the public.

Where did the seed library come from?

The new seed library was brought to the Racine Public Library by a partnership with UW Extension. We owe a big thank-you to UW-Extension's Amy

Macemon for bringing the seed library to life. We also owe thanks to several library teammates:

- Library handyman Mike, who revived an old card catalog to hold the seeds.
- Artist and digital services assistant Brianna, who transformed the former catalog into a floral masterpiece.
- Horticulturalist and library assistant Dawn, who prepared and packaged all the seeds for the community to take home.
- Dawn's husband, who applied woodworking touches to make the seed library easier to use.
- Keiko from youth services, who is hosting programs about the seed library, gardening and how to get started.

The library and UW-Extension hope you enjoy this new community resource. Happy panting!

New Book Display: Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women

Native American women face murder rates more than 10 times higher than the national average. To raise awareness, Menominee tribal legislator Rachel Fernandez put together a book display to remember the women we've lost and protect those with us today.
